

New Nation, 10 September 2007

Review - Sexual Attraction Revealed

Andrea Enisuoh

Sexual Attraction Revealed

Nicole Moore (editor)

I REALLY didn't know that to expect when I was presented with the book Sexual Attraction Revealed to read. Erotica, Mills and Boon-like slush? Actually it was none of the above. Sexual Attraction Revealed is actually a delightful, straightforward read that provides a snapshot of the mindset of many in our communities.

From the hard-hitting introduction, which not only puts the book in context, but questions why interracial relationships between black British men and white British women are the highest in Europe; through to the captivating poetry from many of the contributors this book is a gem.

Divided into two sections: Sugar and Spice and Joy and Pain, we are presented with cogent thoughts, opinions and memories.

In terms of poetry Sheree Mack certainly stands out, especially her thought-provoking piece Other Women. Writer Patsy Antoine's essay The Poetry of Unspoken Words was a lyrical delight. And Editor Nicole Moore provides several pieces that showcase her writing talent.

The writings also reveal a lot about Moore's thoughts on not only sexual attraction but motherhood, interracial relationships and even growing up in a white household. In fact, Nicole Moore has so much to say that maybe she needs to bring out a collection purely of her own. For now though she seems happy to showcase some very talented writers and poets.

